Instructions

It is important in legal situations to be able to see an issue from both sides. This allows you to both best present your case and to defend your case when you know the arguments against it. Show this using this example from the end of chapter two. This should be at least a full paragraph for each side.

Consider the following list of imaginary binding case precedents in your jurisdiction. Use it to analogize or distinguish the “cases” listed below.
2009 – Discrimination against reds is not allowed.
2014 – It is acceptable to exclude squares.
2020 – Discrimination against greens is not allowed.
Case A: You feel you have been discriminated against because you are purple. How would your lawyer argue your case? What would the opposing lawyer argue?
